The Inclusion Assistant (Report and Video)

A consultation with young disabled people and their parents to think about the role of non-teaching assistants in mainstream education, particularly with regard to young people with high-level support needs. This report captures the best thinking of a group of young people and their allies who have pioneered in inclusion and who really know what needs to happen.

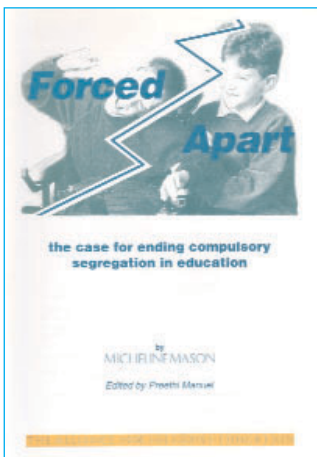

Price: £10 plus £1.50 p&p Report without video: £6 plus £1 p&p

Whose Voice is it Anyway? (1999)

Carried out by two disabled researchers, this project set out to ask young people in special and mainstream schools what they felt about their lives. Full of the words of the students, this report gives access to their thoughts on friendship, learning support assistants, teachers, parents and the life ahead of them. A must for everyone who lives or works with young disabled people, or who is a young disabled person struggling to get the adult world to see sense. Also available in a short 'young person friendly' version.

Price: £6 plus £1 p&p. Short version: £1.50 plus 50p p&p

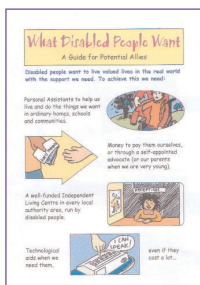

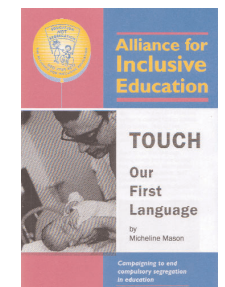

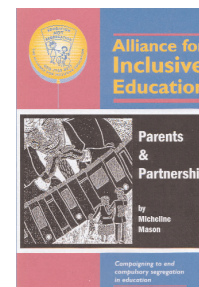

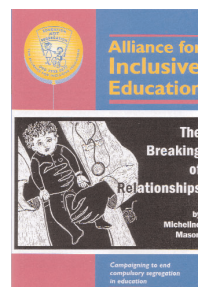

Forced Apart – the case for ending compulsory segregation (1998)

A detailed case arguing for the removal of the conditions on the legal duty of LEAs to provide a mainstream school place for a child with a Statement of Special Educational Need.

Price: £1 plus 50p p&p
